Hi Lori:

Yes, snow threatened, but slow to materialize. That being said, it's the pacific northwest so there is the usual chaotic and disjointed overreaction, followed by anger and second guessing by parents struggling for alternative plans for their kids, and inconsistent decisions by school districts, state governments, city government, transportation providers etc about whether to open, close or delay. You know the routine.

Fortunately this has been the media buzz for the last THREE days so smart people brought their computers home so they could work ☺

Margaret and I have a draft ready to go on notes. I think Margaret was going to try to format it, but I would be happy to send it to you in draft and then when you have added your comments we could format and finalize. See attached.

Thanks, had not heard about the snow!

By the way, have not gotten notes from last PH senior managers meeting and we are meeting again next week. Will need to develop agenda items.

Hi Lori: We are waiting for the impending snow-pacolypse to descend up on Portland.

Based on a Sept. 17 email from you, (will forward now) I have on my calendar Dec. 8 from 2:30 – 4.
